

If you can't conjure up any of your old childhood daydreams, don't worry. These ideas and perceptions shift as we get older, and what we once wanted when we were young may simply not appeal to us now.

But there are personal long term goals you can achieve. You have to be willing to open yourself up to the possibilities that surround you.

Dare to dream bigger and larger than you ever have before.

Long-Term Goals and Bonus Ideas to Inspire You

Explore a culture you've always been fascinated by.

Go on a trip that will challenge you physically, like a trek to the Peruvian citadel of Machu Picchu, or a tour of the sweeping fjords of Norway.

Learn about a place you've never been. Decide where you want to go, and set it in motion.

By awe-inspiring, I don't just mean a weekend road-trip to someplace local. I mean plan an adventure that has the potential to change your life.

1 Travel Somewhere Awe-Inspiring

What is it that you love to do? What do you wish you had more time to pursue?

Perhaps you have a skill or craft you've long been invested in. Or perhaps there's something new you've been longing to learn.

2 Develop Your Craft

Set aside time on a regular basis to dedicate to your craft. Paint, write, take photos, carve, build, play, learn, explore. Set a personal milestone for yourself so you have something to work towards. Decide how to get to where you want to be.

3 Do Something Daring

We've begun to verge into bucket list territory, but that's okay. Because doing things that inspire and excite you will only feed the flames of your ambitions. Ever thought of sky diving? How about learning to fly a plane? Does scuba diving sound like a thrill?

Here are a few ideas you could pursue:

- 1 Bungee jumping
- 2 Surfing
- 3 Ride a hot air balloon
- 4 Ride in a helicopter
- 5 Go white-water rafting
- 6 Learn to ski
- 7 Go kayaking

Do these ideas sound wild? Intimidating? Out of reach? That's the point! But you may surprise yourself with just how close they truly are.
